Musings

We enjoyed a hot summer (too hot for some!) and this lasted into early autumn. But in the last few weeks autumn seems to have arrived and announced its arrival with a bang. We have had two named storms, one on the tail of the other. Climatologists advise that global warming means that we will have more summer heatwaves and more windy and wet winters. We will all have to adapt. We need to find ways to keep our homes cooler in summer and many will need to improve their flood defences.

God created a wonderful, complicated world. A world in which all things are interconnected. A natural, or man-made, disaster in one place can have effects which spread around the world. A major volcanic eruption can send clouds of ash high into the atmosphere resulting in changing weather patterns around the world. As seas warm fish and mammals change their migratory habits. Once a rare sight, large shoals of tuna have been seen off the coast of Cornwall this summer. But while some animals thrive and spread into new areas, others struggle to survive. For some nations too rising sea levels, as a result of melting ice-caps, are swallowing their land and threatening their livelihoods.

As our planet changes we all try to do our bit to help slow the rate of temperature increase. We recycle and re-use seeking ways to cut our carbon footprint. But we know that God loves the world he has created and he loves all his people. So we trust in him and pray that he will prosper the work of scientists and environmentalists so they may show us new ways that we can support Creation.
