Musings

This Sunday, 10th May, is the last proper Sunday of Easter. (Next Sunday is the Seventh Sunday of Easter but is usually known as the Sunday after the Ascension.) It may just be me but the Easter season has seemed long this year. As Easter was quite early, at the beginning of April, it felt as if spring had not properly begun and now, at the beginning of May, we are seeing the early summer flowers. It has been a topsy-turvy spring. Some plants, like bluebells, began to flower early while others are slow off the mark. We are told that with climate change our weather patterns will keep changing. We will have wetter winters, but they will not be so many cold spells and we should expect more heatwaves and droughts in summer. In our present climate the weather changes rapidly from day to day, or even hour to hour – hot to cold or rain to sun - so I expect we shall adjust to it no matter what may come. It's not so easy though for those living on Pacific islands where rising sea levels are encroaching on their land, nor for the polar bears as the Arctic ice melts. We pray for the work of scientists and environmentalists who are seeking ways to slow the rate of temperature rise.

God created a world so that it was all in balance. And we are told that he thought it was very good (Genesis 1 verse 31). God has given the human race the ingenuity and inventiveness to do so many good things, to find remedies for many diseases, to invent technologies to help us keep in touch and appliances to make daily life easier. And yet so often we have used these same gifts in the pursuit of selfishness and greed. We pray that God will show us how to be good stewards of his world. He loves us so much, may we find a way to love one another and all of God's creation.
